Studies in North American Membracidae. By Edward P. Van Duzee In the present paper I give the results of a systematic study of all the Membracids in my own collection and of such additional material as I could procure from my correspondents. With this material I have been able to recognize a considerable portion of the species published by Say, Fitch and Emmons and most of those of the more recent writers. It is quite possible that some of these determinations of the older species may have to be changed as the result of later studies and the acquisition of fuller material but I believe the most of them will stand as here recognized. A large number of our species were described by Say and Fitch, whose descriptions, especially those of Say, were concise and sufficient, and most of these species have been...
