Not illustrated. 1916 Excerpt: . . . previously stated, these possibilities and advantages are to be adequately obtained only in some form or type of tooth which presents as much porcelain as possible, this porcelain not being weakened by the presence of metal pins, nor by the provisions for retention, and which, therefore, possesses a maximum of strength, which is of natural form, more or less universally applicable, and which will require but a minimum of grinding in effecting the desired and required adaptation. This latter feature, as applied to the retentive surface, is essential, because in proportion as a given form of porcelain tooth will require but little or no grinding upon this surface in effecting its adaptation to the requirements of the individual case, may it be expected to be replaceable or interchangeable. These combined advantages, I believe, are to be obtained in a form of tooth suggested by the writer...
