Genevieve--Her Miracles--Tomb and Adoration--Private Masses. I was one day, in the neighbourhood of the Place de Greve, and came rather accidentally upon the church of St. Gerwais. --Its architecture is the more striking, as you would never expect to find such a work in the midst of the filthy, narrow, and irregular streets, which surround it. The churches of Paris are always open--always accessible to the public. I stepped into this out of a shower of rain, and select it almost at random, as one of the few, of which it is possible to make special mention. I have never been in one, in which there were not persons at worship; persons to beg; persons at confession; officials, and priests. --There sat at the entrance of this, amongst other persons, a man, whose statue-like stillness, attracted my notice. I am blind j and the father of a family; was the simple announcement, in his own tongue, written on a placard, affixed to his person. --There was an air of reserve, almost of dignity, in this; coupled with a certain calm submission to inevitable destiny--and a sort of taking for granted, that the human heart was not all stone, and that the simple fact was enough. I have observed this...
